

Everyone should have a place to call home

The Government said places like Winterbourne View are 'not homes'. But 3,250 people with a learning disability still live in them. For 71% there is still no set plan to move them out.

“At high risk of abuse”

Winterbourne serious case review

People are still stuck

'Fauzia has spent 18 months in a unit. Here she has been repeatedly restrained and kept in isolation. We can not believe what she has been through.'

Fauzia's family

56% had experienced self harm, an accident, physical assault, hands-on restraint or been kept in isolation*

64% had been given anti-psychotic medication on a regular basis*

60% have been there one year or more

*Leading up to the Learning Disability Census published December 2013

Stuck in a unit
Restrictive practices
Far from family and friends

This is not a home. And it is costing a fortune in public money – in many cases up to £4,500 per week

NHS England data shows more people are going into units than are coming out!

In England, between September and December 2013:

← 247

patients went into units

124 →

patients came out of units

TWICE AS MANY PEOPLE WENT IN

“A good quality of life”

Mansell 2 report

Change is possible

'After 4 years in a unit Chrissy is finally in her own home with the support she needs, living near us. We are so pleased we can just pop round and see her.'

'Before, when we were sending people out of area, money was just disappearing out of Salford. Now that we are spending money investing in local services, people can have a fulfilling life in Salford.'

Dave Clemmett, Salford Council and NHS

A place to call home
The right support
Close to family and friends

For the same money or even less people could live in their local community
